MAKAWAO UNION CHURCH LADIES GIVE BAZAAR

[Special Star-Bulletin Correspondence]

WAILUKU, Oct. 15.—The October and November entertainments that various Maui Churches have given for many years past as annual affairs had their send-off last Saturday evening at the Pala Orpheum, when the ladies of the Makawao Union Church gave their Annual Bazaar and Sale.

Quiet out of the usual was the presentation on this annual occasion of anything in the dramatic line. It was a successful, however, that the Maui people hope that a nature drama will become a regular feature of the Makawao bazaar.

The title of the one act play was "How The Vote Was Won." It was first presented at the Royal Theatre, London, April 13, 1909, and was written by Cicely Hamilton and Christopher St. John. It is a play written evidently with a purpose. On the back of the program for the Pala presentation was an advertisement of the National American Women Suffrage association with headquarters in New York City. It is needless to say that every man in the audience, had he been in the same fix as was the leading character of the play, Horace Cole (a clerk about thirty years of age), would certainly have cast his vote at the polls that women should be granted suffrage.

The play was exciting from the opening words of the conversation between Ethel, the wife of the clerk and her energetic suffragette sister, when they debated the question before the public that very day, until the end of the play when the hero of the situation, completely won over to a decision to vote for women, makes an impassioned speech in favor of women suffrage.

The measures used to persuade him were those apparently in vogue throughout the whole of England, for every woman without her own home and her own husband to support her must come to the home of her nearest male relative. Into the small house of Horace Cole and his wife, with their one servant, came in succession the various near and distant relatives who claimed he must support them.

Clarence G. White was the leading character of the play. He had trained the caste. Needless to say that all took their parts admirably. The speeches assigned to each of the relatives were very clever and laughter broke forth repeatedly from the audience. The costume of Lily (the maid of all work) was most extreme, and every one was amused as she came on the stage. The get up of the evening, however, was that of Miss Lizzie Wilkins, who was rigged out exactly to suit her position in life that of a boarding house mistress. Her little black bonnet kept bobbing from one side of her head to the other as she came panting into the room. In one hand she carried an immense cage with a parrot in it, and in the other hand a satchel. Somehow she also managed to lead a big dog in through the door at the same time. When Horace saw her he disappeared under the table, and came out only after his wife had teased and petted him until he was more willing to face his six "nearest female relatives."

The cast is given below:
Horace Cole, (a Clerk about 30)... Mr. Clarence White
Ethel, (his wife)..... Mrs. Clarence White
Winifred, (her sister)..... Mrs. William Nicoll
Agatha, (Horace's sister)..... Mrs. Digby Sloggett
Molly, (his niece)..... Miss Vanderhoof
Madame Christine, (his distant relative)..... Miss Beach
Maude Sparks, (his cousin)..... Mrs. E. E. Boyum
Miss Lizzie Wilkins, (his aunt)..... Mrs. Frank Baldwin
Lily, (the maid-of-all-work)..... Miss Alexa von Tempesky
Gerard Williams, (his neighbor)..... Mr. Digby Sloggett
Scene: Sitting room in Horace Cole's house at Brixton.

The play lasted about an hour. More than four hundred people enjoyed the performance. They then turned their attention to the attractive booths placed in different parts of the Orpheum. In these many fancy articles were for sale, ice cream and candy. The sale was very successful. Over $600.00 was cleared from the evening's pleasant affair.

It doesn't pay to do favors for a man who has a poor memory.
